

TRANSITION RESOURCE TABLES

There is an abundance of information regarding transition planning for students with disabilities available on the internet. The Transition Resource Tables contain the most frequently used low-cost/no-cost web-based transition resources available to professionals, students with disabilities and their families. To find specific information, use the content and tool columns to identify resources. The tables contain resources for professional development, teacher use, student use, and parent/family use. In the leftmost column, the resource name and URL are listed. The content available in the resource appears in the yellow columns in the middle of the tables. Content in the areas of self-determination, assessment, career/employment, postsecondary education, Indicator-13, IEP/SOP, universal design for learning, evidence-based practice, social, health, financial, family, learning strategies, legislation, law, and special education policy are available. The rightmost, blue, columns contain the type of tools available on the website. Web-based resources include tools such as modules, training guides, presentations, webinars, technical assistance, publications, videos, certification and training, conference information, and other additional resources.

FOUR TABLES ARE INCLUDED:

Transition Professional Development Resources - available to support school and community professionals in obtaining transition information on a variety of topics including employment, postsecondary education and independent living. The low-cost/no-cost web-based resources contain information on evidence-based practices in transition, state performance indicators, disability fact sheets, modules and videos on variety transition topics and more.

Transition Resources for Teacher Use - available to support teacher in developing transition plans and coordinating transition services for students with exceptionalities. The web-based resources contain lesson plans, fact-sheets, information on transition assessments, interactive transition planning websites to use with students and much more.

Transition Resources for Student Use - available for students to explore their post-school options in employment, postsecondary education, and independent living. A variety of web-based resources are available to support students in learning about, and communicating their strengths, needs interests and preferences. Several interactive websites are available to engage students in participating in their transition planning.

Transition Resources for Family Use - available to support families through the transition planning process. An excellent way to collaborate with families, the web-based resources provide a wealth of information on a variety of transition topics such as health care, adult services, employment, postsecondary education and independent living for youth with exceptionalities.
